

Michelle Waldron

Final Project Reflection

My final project was a component of what will become my capstone project. The project had its ups and downs as Adobe Captivate was glitchy at times, but overall I really enjoyed pulling together a lesson that encourages knowledge and learning around feminist crime theory. After a thorough review of the project by my peers, it was suggested that I make a few grammatical and spelling corrections. Also, it was recommended that I add page numbers, increase the use of my avatar, and change text/closed captions.

I implemented the following changes.

- Spelling and grammar were updated to make suggested corrections.
- I added page numbers and a TOC to make the project easier to navigate.
- I added my avatar to the title slide, so she was introduced early in the project.
- I adjusted timing on a few slides where the next button appeared early or late.
- Identified that several of the quiz questions have multiple answers.

Areas that my reviewers suggest changes are:

- Closed captions - I opted not to add CC to the first few slides as all the text is on-screen.
- Captions for image narration - this is not possible in Adobe Captivate.
- End button - As this will be embedded in my Canvas Capstone project, I did not see a need for an end button to conclude the lesson.

Peer Feedback on Canvas - To add to project

- A suggestion to explore the intersection of women and race was recommended.
- Rephrase the wording for how to select Jenny's path in the Case Study.
- Add a next button on quiz questions.
- Adding a To-Do list or action item at the end for the iLearn/Canvas activity.